

Marketing Playbook — Turn Someday Into Day One

Everything in one place. No more building until you're in the Play Store.

Read top to bottom once, then work from the STEPS and the NEXT BATCH.

1. THE PLAY (the whole strategy on one screen)

Positioning (say this everywhere):

The recovery app that includes the person who loves them.

Not "multi-addiction." Not "2am." That one line. Four competitors already say "track any habit" — nobody says the partner has a place here.

The front door: HER, flavored to drinking.

- You market ONE narrow door at a time. They all open into the same app, same email list, same subscription.

- First door = the wife of the man who drinks. Biggest, least stigmatized, ad-safe, and — the key — nobody has ever built a product for her (Al-Anon has served her since 1951 with no app).

- She's the buyer (searches in crisis, has money), AND she's your way into the crowded alcohol market you can't outspend — she brings him the app.

Why not the other doors first:

- Porn = platform-banned, free-first crowd, Quittr owns search. Stays in the app, off the sign.

- "Quit drinking" direct = you'd be the 5th new app fighting Reframe ($100M) for the most expensive keywords. Don't.

- Couples/both-have-habits = needs 4 conditions to line up. Keep it as a content angle, not the door.

Your validated proof: your own YouTube — "you are valid too" (supporter angle) got 428 views; generic "you come first" got 14. Specific wins.

2. WHAT'S ALREADY LIVE (use these today)

Pages:

- turnsomedayintodayone.com/when-he-drinks — the drinking-door landing page
- turnsomedayintodayone.com/for-her — the general partner page
- turnsomedayintodayone.com/brainreset — the free-PDF email gate (him)
- turnsomedayintodayone.com/quiz.html — the 2-min check-in (now has a Back button)

Short bio links (tracking baked in — just paste them):

- TikTok bio: turnsomedayintodayone.com/go/tiktok
- YouTube link: turnsomedayintodayone.com/go/youtube
- Facebook: turnsomedayintodayone.com/go/facebook

Content you already have:

- `marketing-content-pack.md` — 9 scripts + 10 cards (lanes A/B/C/D)
- `AI-SCENES.md` (root; formerly `ai-short-scripts.md`) — AI cinematic-short storyboards (porn/food/consequence/her arcs) with per-shot AI scene directions
- Your Buffer 42-post batch (SLOT A him / B her / C proof)

Two production methods, both feed the same doors:

- Teleprompter talking-heads (you on camera) = trust-builders. `marketing-content-pack.md`.
- AI cinematic shorts (generated scenes + voiceover) = scroll-stoppers. `AI-SCENES.md`.

Use character-lock so the same man/wife appear across every clip. Run ~1/week.

Your production line (all free, in Studio):

Teleprompter → webcam recorder (countdown, photo, background blur, self-view)

→ local captions → reframe 9:16 → audio remaster → schedule in Post tab.

3. THE STEPS (do these, in order)

This week — setup (one sitting each)

1. Bios: paste `/go/youtube` into your YouTube channel link, `/go/tiktok` into TikTok bio, `/go/facebook` into Facebook. (During weeks you push the "her" angle, this is the link. It all tracks automatically.)

2. Retitle your existing YouTube shorts in YouTube Studio → Content → Shorts. Use search-language titles (the situation, not the encouragement):

- "you are valid too" → "When you're supporting someone with an addiction and nobody asks about you"
- "with someone struggling" → "Loving someone who's struggling is its own kind of tired"
- "when you are trapped" → "When you feel trapped by someone else's addiction"
- Rule: every title names HER SITUATION, in words she'd type at 1am.

3. Fix the YouTube bio to lead with the empty room, not the banned word:

> Addicted for 38 years. At 50 it was do or die. I chose Day One — and I > built the app I needed, with a side for the person who loves them.

4. Delete the test123 test signup: log into that account → Profile → Delete account (works now).

This week — first content push

5. Batch-record 3 videos from the NEXT BATCH below (one teleprompter sitting, countdown + blur background). Caption them, reframe 9:16.

6. Post native to TikTok, YouTube Shorts, Facebook — not via API. Native uploads get more reach and the platforms don't punish them.

7. Tick "AI-generated" disclosure on every upload.

Ongoing — the weekly rhythm (keep it boring)

8. 3 videos + 2 cards per week. Lead with the HER/drinking lane (it's validated); mix in a him/supporter one. Batch-record so it's one sitting.

9. Work the comments — this is where the leads are. On the "her" videos, commenters asking "what app is this?" get the name (and the link only if they ask). Reply like a person, never paste a link cold.

10. Check /admin/stats once a week. It shows emails by platform. Whichever source grows is where you post more. Stop guessing; follow the number.

Distribution beyond posting (higher-leverage, do after the rhythm is set)

11. Rehab roundup outreach: email 25 rehabs/treatment centers that publish "best recovery apps" lists. Pitch: "Your list is from 2021 — here's a free 2026 update, and none of the apps on it support the family." You're giving them SEO; they add you because the family angle is the gap.

12. Free listings: submit to AlternativeTo against I Am Sober, Nomo, Sober Grid, Loosid. Free, indexes "X alternative" searches.

13. One YouTube long-form in her exact search language: "My husband drinks and I don't know what to do." Ranks for years while shorts churn. (Script it in the teleprompter.)

Only after paid interest shows up

14. Cheap ads on partner-of-drinker keywords — never on "quit drinking" head terms. Only once /admin/stats shows the angle converts organically.

4. NEXT BATCH — new scripts to shoot (validated lane first)

Same rules: spoken words, short lines, hook is line one said to the lens, no "research shows" / no dopamine talk. App name on the end card; link in bio.

HER — the wife of the man who drinks (lead with these)

H1 — "I only had two"

HOOK: "I only had two." You've heard that so many times you could laugh. You counted. You always count.

Two doesn't leave the recycling like that.

You're not paranoid.

You're just the only sober person keeping track.

That exhaustion has a name,

and there's a place that's actually for you.

H2 — "The Sunday promise"

HOOK: He means it every Sunday. It's gone by Friday.

And every week you let yourself believe it a little,

because not believing it costs even more.

Here's what nobody tells you:

you can stop grading your week on his word.

There's a way to tell a promise from a change — from the outside. That part is yours to learn.

H3 — "Nobody asks about you"

HOOK: Everybody asks how he's doing. Nobody asks how you are.

He gets the check-ins. He gets the grace.

You get "you're so strong."

Strong is just the word people use when they need you to keep carrying it.

You're allowed to put some of it down.

You didn't cause this, and it was never yours to fix.

H4 — "You went looking"

HOOK: You checked his phone again. It didn't make you feel better.

It never does.

Because what you're actually looking for isn't in there.

It's whether he's doing the work

when nobody's watching.

You can't find that in a search history.

And you were never supposed to have to look.

HIM / SUPPORTER — won on your channel, keep feeding it

S1 — "You can't manage it"

HOOK: You can't manage someone out of an addiction. I know. I tried.

Men get handed one tool: fix it.

So we track it, control it, turn her into a project.

And she reads every bit of that as

"you're the problem."

Standing beside someone and carrying them are not the same thing. Only one works.

S2 — "Who did you tell?"

HOOK: Quick question — who have you actually told?

If she drinks too much,

if he can't put it down —

who knows?

For most people the honest answer is nobody.

You're handling the hardest thing in your life in silence.

That silence isn't strength. It's just weight.

CORE USER — the man in it

M1 — "Day one again"

HOOK: I've had more day ones than I can count.

That used to be the most shameful sentence I owned.

Now it's the reason I stopped trusting willpower and built a system instead.

Willpower gets you to Tuesday.

A system gets you to day ninety.

If today's day one again — good. You showed back up.

CARDS (big type, app name in the corner)

1. "I only had two." You counted. Two doesn't leave the recycling like that.
 2. He means it every Sunday. It's gone by Friday.
 3. "You're so strong" is the word people use when they need you to keep carrying it.
 4. What you're looking for isn't in his phone.
 5. You can't manage someone out of an addiction.
 6. Handling it in silence isn't strength. It's just weight.
 7. You didn't cause it. You can't cure it. You're allowed to stop trying.
 8. Willpower gets you to Tuesday. A system gets you to day ninety.

5. THE MEASUREMENT LOOP (how you know it's working)

Post → short link (/go/. . .) → landing page → email captured →

/admin/stats counts it by platform.

Every week, open /admin/stats and read three numbers:

- Leads by source — which platform is actually delivering emails.
- Signups — how many became accounts.
- Trials — how many started the 7-day trial.

Double down on whatever line grows. Kill whatever's flat. That's the whole job.

6. GUARDRAILS (while in Play Store testing)

- Web/content changes = safe. Landing pages, videos, posts, lesson copy — none of it touches the Android package or resets your tester clock.
 - Do NOT touch billing (`store-billing.js` / Stripe) until you're through the 12-testers/14-day window — changing purchase behavior mid-review invites scrutiny.
 - Keep the live site stable — testers open the app daily; a broken deploy during the window hurts more than a quiet week.
 - Get a few real testers mixed in with any tester-community ones, and note one real piece of feedback you can quote on the production-access form.
 - Data safety form: if you ever add a feature that shares data between users (the partner-link idea), update the form BEFORE it goes live.
- No claims copy anywhere should say "research shows," "clinically proven," or name a brain chemical — your own claims audit already flagged that. Story, not statistics.
