

TALKING HEADS — 5 scripts (you on camera, 20–25s each, $0)

These are the five TALK scripts from the 18 Aug batch, pulled out into their own downloadable file. Each one answers all five questions — WHAT, WHO, WHEN, WHERE, HOW — in the caption, because a stranger needs the full picture before they tap. The hook lands first, in the first three seconds.

Record exactly like SCRIPTS.md: one person, one camera, slow. Read it three times, keep the third take. No AI here — your real face is the whole point.

T1 — "Who catches you" · supporter · 22s

YouTube title: Who catches you when you're the one who falls TikTok / Facebook: Who catches you when you're the one who falls?

Hook (first line): Who catches you when you're the one who falls?

The situation — WHAT / WHO / WHEN / WHERE / HOW:

- WHAT — The invisible second job of loving someone through addiction.
- WHO — The supporter: wife, husband, mother, father, son, daughter, best friend. (And the addict they're holding up.)
- WHEN — The worst ten minutes: 2am, after the relapse, after the lie.
- WHERE — The room next to them. Your own home, which stopped feeling safe.
- HOW — You can't pour from an empty cup. The app has a whole section built for YOU — free, private, not a footnote in his.

Say this:

Who catches you when you're the one who falls? You're the one counting the bottles. The one awake at 2am. The one everybody calls strong because you're still standing. But here's what nobody says out loud: you're in recovery too, and you've never had a program. So I built you one. Free. Your own day counter, your own SOS button, your own lessons — for the person who loves the addict. Because you can't pour from an empty cup.

Caption: WHO — the person holding up an addict: wife, husband, mom, son, best friend. WHAT — the invisible second recovery nobody names. WHEN — 2am, the worst ten minutes. WHERE — the room next to him. HOW — your own day counter, SOS tools, and lessons built for you, free. You're not the footnote in his story. Link in bio.

T2 — "Two people in this house" · addict · 23s

YouTube title: Addiction is a two-person story — you're not the only one healing TikTok / Facebook: There are two people in this house. Only one is using.

Hook: There are two people in this house. Only one of them is using.

The situation:

- WHAT — Addiction never happens to one person. The person watching lives it too.
- WHO — You, the one using — and the one who loves you, the supporter.
- WHEN — Every night, every promise, every "I meant it this time."
- WHERE — The same four walls. Two different battles.
- HOW — One app gives both sides their own track: 13 habits for you, a whole free section for them. One Day One each.

Say this:

There are two people in this house. Only one of them is using. The other one is counting. Counting drinks. Counting the hours you're late. Counting the promises you meant. I know, because I was the one using for 38 years — and my wife was the one counting. When I finally got free, I built one app for both of us. Thirteen tracks for me. A whole section for her. Because the person watching is fighting too — and they've never had a program.

Caption: WHO — the addict AND the person who loves them, under one roof. WHAT — addiction is a two-person story; only one side ever gets help. WHEN — every night, every promise. WHERE — the same four walls, two battles. HOW — 13 habit tracks for you, a whole free section for the person watching. One app. Two people. Two Day Ones. Link in bio.

T3 — "You can't pull him up" · supporter · 22s

YouTube title: You can't pull him up if he's pulling you under (support without drowning) TikTok / Facebook: You can't pull him up if he's pulling you under.

Hook: You can't pull him up if he's pulling you under.

The situation:

- WHAT — The line between supporting someone and going under with them.
- WHO — You, the supporter — and the person slipping.
- WHEN — The day he relapses and you feel it like it happened to you.
- WHERE — At home, after the door closes and it's just the two of you again.
- HOW — Boundaries first: your own oxygen mask before you try to save him. The app's supporter section carries half the weight so you don't have to.

Say this:

You can't pull him up if he's pulling you under. I know that sounds cold. But it's the thing that finally saved both of us. You keep thinking love is the lever — that if you just hold on tighter, he'll stop. But the day you stop going under with him is the day you can actually help. So put your own mask on first. There's a section of my app built for this — for the person who's been carrying two recoveries. It's free. Use it before you burn out.

Caption: WHO — the supporter who's been carrying two recoveries. WHAT — supporting without drowning; love isn't the lever, boundaries are. WHEN — the day he relapses and it feels like yours. WHERE — at home, after the door closes. HOW — put your own oxygen mask on first; the supporter section in the app carries half the weight, free. Link in bio.

T4 — "The worst ten minutes" · addict · 24s

YouTube title: How to get through the worst ten minutes of a craving TikTok / Facebook: The relapse doesn't happen at noon. It happens in the worst ten minutes.

Hook: The relapse doesn't happen at noon. It happens in the worst ten minutes.

The situation:

- WHAT — The craving spike: the ten minutes where every relapse is actually decided.
- WHO — You, alone with the urge.
- WHEN — The worst ten minutes: 2am, the bad day, the trigger you didn't see coming.
- WHERE — Your car, your kitchen, your phone already in your hand.
- HOW — Stop deciding in the storm. Write the plan now, while you're clear, and put it one tap away (the SOS button). The urge passes; you don't have to pass with it.

Say this:

The relapse doesn't happen at noon when you're fired up. It happens in the worst ten minutes — 2am, the bad day, the trigger you didn't see coming. That's when willpower loses every single time, because you're deciding in the middle of the storm. So stop deciding in the storm. Write the plan now, while you're clear, and put it one tap away. That's the SOS button. That's what gets you from minute one to minute eleven. The urge passes. You don't have to pass with it.

Caption: WHO — you, alone with the urge. WHAT — the craving spike where every relapse is decided. WHEN — the worst ten minutes: 2am, the bad day. WHERE — your car, your kitchen, your phone in your hand. HOW — write the plan in advance and put it one tap away; the SOS button gets you from minute one to eleven. The urge passes. Link in bio.

T5 — "Two Day Ones" · both · 24s

YouTube title: Most recovery apps make you pick one addiction — mine doesn't, and it's for both of you TikTok /

Facebook: He's not the only one who needs a Day One. So do you.

Hook: He's not the only one who needs a Day One. So do you.

The situation:

- WHAT — The app's two-sided, 13-track design (what makes it different).
- WHO — The addict and the supporter, together — but each with their own account, private.
- WHEN — Whenever either of you is ready. Tonight counts.
- WHERE — On your own phone, nobody watching.
- HOW — Private day counter, SOS tools, 13 habit tracks for the one struggling; a whole free section for the one supporting.

Say this:

He's not the only one who needs a Day One. So do you. Most recovery apps make you pick ONE habit — like the drinking didn't come with the gambling, or the food, or the anger. And almost none of them have anything for the person watching it happen. So I built one that does both. Thirteen tracks that work together for you — and a whole free section for the person who loves you. Private day counter. SOS tools for the worst ten minutes. One app. Two people. Two Day Ones.

Caption: WHO — the addict AND the supporter, each with their own private account. WHAT — one app with 13 habit tracks that work together, plus a section built for the person watching. WHEN — whenever either of you is ready; tonight counts. WHERE — your own phone, nobody watching. HOW — day counter, SOS tools, and lessons for both sides. One app. Two Day Ones. Link in bio.
